BAUHAUS WALTER GROPIUS

Context matters. From our own experience we know there are places that are uplifting and others that depress us. Space that energise and space that exhaust us. We depend on our surroundings to feel spirited and hopeful. Understanding the modern office first means understanding modern architecture.

1919 when Walter Gropius founded the Bauhaus in Weimar, the later legendary Hochschule für Gestaltung, he defined a turning point in modern architecture. The Bauhaus was attempting to bring together various artistic and technical disciplines. Architecture was understood as a synthesis of the arts.

INTERNATIONAL STYLE VILLA SAVOYE - LE CORBUSIER

Le Corbusier was one of the most important and influential architects of the 20th Century. He consequently separated load and nonload bearing elements. By using a system of posts no limits were set in designing the floor plans. Instead of the usual high windows, Le Corbusier used wide windows and achieved a significantly better and more uniform exposure.

In the 1920s, Le Corbusier experimented with colours, and their architectural effect. For him, the colour of a building was important as the layout and form.

The executive desking of vitta offers a variety of finishes as plastic laminates, wood veneers, glass, chrome metal structures, painted in white, steel gray and black.

NORTH AMERICA
JOHNSON WAX BUILDING
FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT

Frank Lloyd Wright represents the North American point of view in modern architecture. In 1936 he designed the Johnson Wax Building which is a completely introverted building. Rooms are only indirectly exposed through skylights in the walls and ceilings. Inside the building's expressive mushroom-shaped concrete columns support the roof of the large operating room. Wright employed more than 200 kinds of bricks to build his idea of a flow movement of the walls.
